ncidente

On-line Accident and Incident reporting system

Overview

Incidente is an on-line accident and near miss reporting system designed for organisations of all sizes. It comes with two configuration options for tailoring to your organisation.

It is very user-friendly and does not require any instructions for a user reporting an incident.

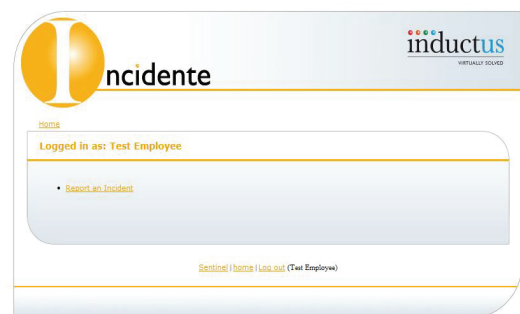

How Incidente works

When an incident (accident or near-miss) occurs any Inductus Sentinel user can initiate a report. This should be done at the earliest opportunity and will automatically alert all parties required to deal with the process.

The process will automatically decide the severity of the incident based on the information input during the reporting process.

A direct link is provided in the process to the RIDDOR reporting website when the system decides it is required. There is a minimum requirement for paper based documentation while still encouraging the printing of hard copies where required.

Towards the end of the process Incidente will calculate the costs that have occurred and provides a means of implementing further steps to avoid a re-occurrence of the incident.

Configuration Options

Option A - Location Driven

An industry standard configuration for large organisations. When a user reports an incident an automated process is controlled by managers at the location and the Head Office monitors the process, ensuring that every stage is correctly completed. This is a recommended option for large organisations where minimum administration is required with all essential stages needing to be monitored and completed correctly.

Option B - Head Office Driven

For smaller organisations this option gives a higher degree of control by Head Office. When a user reports an incident in this option the Head Office Incidente administrator controls the semi-automated process step by step but must trigger each stage.
