Overview

SafetyNet is the latest addition to the Inductus portfolio and is an automated Risk Assessment training and monitoring system. All users are given job roles. These roles are allocated to the users when programmed into the system by one initial single "New Employee input" when a new employee is added to the system. The system decides what Risk Assessments the user needs to complete based on the defined job roles. If an employee changes their role within the organisation the system will automatically re-assign any relevant risk assessments and enter them into the training diary.

How it works

When a new employee is added to the system, SafetyNet creates a tailored training programme of the risk-assessments that are relevant to their job role. The training tasks are added to their personal Sentinel training diary and spread over a reasonable training period. The resource automatically adjusts the training diary to make sure that not too many events happen at the same time.

The employee works through each risk assessment based on the highest risk items being first in the schedule. With each risk assessment, they study a document or presentation and answer a number of multiple choice questions to verify their understanding. If an employee moves to a different role within the company, SafetyNet identifies the new risk assessments and programmes them automatically. The system finally sets a date for risk assessment reviews at a predefined future time interval.

Additional Features

- Individual Risk Assessment material can be a Flash Video, Powerpoint Presentation or a PDF Document.
- Fully-customisable question templates.
- Questions can be multiple choice, or text input options.
